Are you a high school student interested in:
working on several local environmental projects,
participating in a world-wide survey of sea life,
exploring science careers, and enhancing your college application?

- Join a small team of students spending a week in the field with Waquoit Bay Reserve scientists conducting environmental monitoring projects.
- Travel to Washburn Island and South Cape Beach to collect and identify marine life, monitor rare nesting birds, measure water quality and analyze data.
- In the fall, participants will be invited to attend a summit at the New England Aquarium in Boston to share their experiences and findings with teens from around New England.

Don't miss out. Apply today!
